Brief description of the activities the scholar performed or participated in:

In my research, I investigated how AI technologies enhance accessibility for individuals with disabilities, focusing on tools like voice recognition, automated captions, and smart devices. I explored how companies like Google and Apple are developing accessible products, such as voice assistants and real-time transcription services. My findings showed significant growth in AI-driven accessibility tools, improving independence and opportunities for disabled consumers.

I also discussed challenges, including dependence on technology and potential malfunctions, as well as ensuring consistent accessibility across platforms. Lastly, I highlighted future research on innovations in AI to further support individuals with disabilities and promote inclusivity in both digital and physical spaces.

Written feedback about the scholar's performance:

Hiba's research on AI's role in enhancing accessibility was well-rounded, focusing on how AI tools improve independence for disabled individuals. Her discussion on the challenges and future research in AI-driven inclusivity was valuable.
