Brief description of the activities the scholar performed or participated in:

I did research on 2 parts. In the first part, I tackled the Information Processing Model in which I defined the stages of processing (sensory register, encoding, and retrieval), in addition to how cognitive load affects learning and memory and the limits of human processing. In the second part, I talked about criticism and evolution in which I researched the critiques about the mechanistic view of the mind and its neglect of emotions, in addition to How has the information processing theory evolved in light of developments in neuroscience.

Written feedback about the scholar's performance:

Rafka Abi Younes' research into the Information Processing Model and its evolution offered valuable insights into cognitive theory, balancing foundational knowledge with emerging critiques.
